RESEARCH PROJECTS

Nonprofit Lives: Navigating Democracy through the Nonprofit Form in Global Perspective (2024-present)

What is the relationship of the nonprofit form to democracy? Nonprofits are hydra-headed bellwethers of democratic action, critiquing states and enabling governmental agendas. The space of the nonprofit allows us to think politically about certain institutional possibilities of social action and democratic practice, which are not possible through other institutional frames such as the corporation or the state. If institutional structures generate certain possibilities, what are the possibilities generated by nonprofit-ness? This project comparatively explores nonprofits as key institutional actors in democracies across the globe.

Corporate philanthropy and Social Responsibility in India (2016-2023)

Ethnographic field research on government initiatives to inspire corporate philanthropy in India through a corporate social responsibility (CSR) tax put into law through The Companies Act (2013), which stipulates that corporations must spend 2% on CSR projects. The research, funded by the American Institute of Indian Studies, involves ethnographic interviews with NGO directors, civil servants, chartered accountants, and CSR program administrators in New Delhi.

Legal Reform and Civil Society Regulation in India (2012-2022)

Ethnographic fieldwork on legal advocacy and nongovernmental initiatives for legal reform. The project focused on a cluster of not-for-profit organizations in India's capital city, New Delhi, that were lobbying the government for what they considered to be an enabling environment for civil society organizations. Research involved interviewing tax accounts, civil servants, and directors of civil society organizations involved in pressing for specific laws that affect the voluntary sector regarding philanthropic donations, registration with the government, and income tax law. The primary research was conducted during a sabbatical year, and funded through a sabbatical grant from UW-Milwaukee and a resident fellowship through the Jawaharlal Nehru Institute of Advanced Study (JNIAS) at Jawaharlal Nehru University (JNU).

Giving and Humanitarianism in New Delhi, India (2004-12)

Ethnographic fieldwork on sacred and secular philanthropic and humanitarian practices, focusing on Hindu ideas of giving and donation (dan). Research was funded by a grant from the American Institute of Indian Studies, and consisted of interviews with religious mendicants, temple priests, Indians giving in religious venues and settings as well as directors of secular nongovernmental organizations.

Faith-based Economic Development in Zimbabwe (1996-2004)

Ethnographic fieldwork with Christian non-governmental organizations, World Vision International and Christian Care, involved in programs of economic development. Funded by the Pew Charitable Trusts and the OMSC. The project explored the religious aspects of international economic development and identified the category of faith-based institution in development practice.

RESEARCH SYMPOSIA

Diaspora philanthropy (2010-12)

Collaborative research project with Meena Khandelwal (U Iowa) and Mark Sidel (UW-Madison) on diaspora philanthropy. A summer of collaborative research at University of Iowa in 2010 was funded by an Obermann Center for Advanced Studies Interdisciplinary Research Grant. A symposium was organized in 2012 at University of Iowa involving 13 participants and funded by a University of Iowa Major Projects grant.

Critical Studies of Humanitarianism (2008-11)

Advanced Seminar grant (with Peter Redfield) from the School for Advanced Research in Santa Fe, N.M., to commission ten scholars to write essays on the anthropology of humanitarianism, and to develop the essays into a book.
